Connecting Cities and Schools:
The role of public education in creating equitable, healthy and sustainable communities

Speaker: Deborah McKoy, UC Berkeley Center for Cities and Schools
Date: Wednesday, March 10, 2010
Time: 1:30-2:30pm
Location: 220 Behrakis Health Sciences Center, Northeastern University

Deborah McKoy is the Founding Director of the UC Berkeley Center for Cities and Schools at the Institute of Urban and Regional Development. She has worked at the intersection of urban policy and education for twenty years at national and international levels. Dr. McKoy’s research looks at the intersection of community development, educational reform, and public policy. Her recent publications include: Housing and Education: The Inextricable Link; Segregation: The Rising Costs for America; and "Engaging Schools in Urban Revitalization: The Y-PLAN (Youth – Plan, Learn, Act, Now!)" Journal of Planning Education and Research. Deborah has a PhD from UC Berkeley and MPA from Columbia University.

Contact Aileen Ochoa for more information: A.Ochoa@neu.edu